UK Outlook for Saturday 10 Apr 2021 to Saturday 24 Apr 2021:
A signal for generally settled conditions looks most likely through the start to middle of April with high pressure close to the UK. This will likely bring showers to the north and east of the UK but overall, much of the UK will be drier than average. Temperatures initially rather cold but becoming less cold through this period. Towards the end of the month there are signs that high pressure will become less dominant with the potential for more unsettled and changeable conditions to develop across northwestern areas. Further southeast drier and more settled conditions look likely to prevail.
